The Will To Learn A

“Repetition is the mother of learning” was a phrase often repeated back in my days of learning and teaching Russian. I believe it is true, particularly for learning a language. It is also true that immersion or other forms of learning-by-doing are much more effective than rote learning from a textbook. What has really struck me during the past year, however, is how fundamentally important ...

Human beings enter the world highly motivated to learn. It's how we invent ourselves—a survival mechanism. So when educators talk about students who aren't motivated to learn, I figure something is amiss. Either we can't see what motivates the student in question, or the student's life is dangerously off course.
