Leadership Language: Talking The Talk Or Walking The Walk?

Leaders and managers say they want to foster change and promote continuous improvement, but their actions do not match their words. Managers fail miserably to walk their talk which means they pay lip service to what they say they want to see but employees don't see committed actions that match the words. The leaders' exhortations to employees ring false when their subsequent actions contradict their words.

Walk the Talk: Why Leadership by Example is Powerful.

Leadership by example is something that we see, rather than hear. Think Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr. – two people who inspired movements that changed the history not only of their countries but also of the world. While both are known for their profound insights, they are best remembered by the way they lived peaceful and unassuming lives even when they were right smack in the middle of heavy conflict.

Walk the Talk: Why Leadership by Example is Powerful ...

Leaders who do extraordinary things lead by example, or “walk the talk,” as we businesspeople love to say. Those leaders believe in servant leadership and practice it daily, and they are the ones to whom their employees look up to...not out of fear or intimidation, but with respect and admiration. They are the leaders that people want to follow.
